FIRST COMMUNION

Note from the Pastor

Of Atheists and Fundamentalists

Question: What do Atheists and Fundamentalists have in common?

At first blush the answer would seem to be absolutely nothing. Fundamentalists are the truest of true believers and atheists are not. At second look, however, it reveals they have a whole lot in common.

Fundamentalists see themselves as absolutely right and so do atheists. Atheists brook no doubt about their positions and neither do fundamentalists. Fundamentalists claim that they have the truth because it comes directly from God and atheists know they have the truth because it comes from their reasoning. Most of all they are both literalists. They both interpret the world in a literal, linear fashion. There is only one interpretation and that is no interpretation. Levels of meaning, analogies, symbols and, God forbid, the mystical and mysteries are not part of their common lexicon. No wonder they hate each other.

We all begin as literalists. The word means what the word says. We tell a five year old to, "Pull up your socks." He bends down and pulls up his socks. No, no, we say, "C'mon, move it." He jiggles his tush. A priest friend of mine once saw a three year old bust out into tears when he said the words, "This is My blood which will be poured out for you." Now, we do believe in the real presence but not literal presence. I have to be very careful when I teach the second graders about what they are receiving. What does it mean to eat the Body of Christ? Take that absolutely literally and... oh dear, oh dear. And there's the rub.

Just like Amelia Bedelia who hilariously gets it wrong all the time, so do we tragically get it wrong when we take literally the words that try to describe the indescribable, the ineffable, God. We are going to get it wrong. All words are symbols and all language is metaphor pointing to something else. All religious language is metaphor on steroids pointing to something beyond description. The best we can do is analogy. Even (and especially) Jesus had to use analogies when He wanted to describe what He called the Kingdom of God. There is no one clear, concise, literal definition. The Kingdom of God is like... And then He tells the story which, if we take it literally, will almost always miss the point. All religious language points to something deeper than the surface meaning and this the fundamentalist and atheist seem to miss.

The atheists Richard Dawkins and Christopher Hitchens hated religion because of all the damage it has done throughout history. In the name of God wars have been fought, atrocities committed, inquisitions called and hatred and bigotry justified. On this level, they're right. If we take the words of Scripture literally we can hate and kill the infidel with impunity. As the fundamentalist bumper sticker says, "God said it, I believe it, case closed." The problem with fundamentalism is that it never gets to the fundamentals. It never goes beyond the surface meaning into the deepest and inexpressible meaning that the words are trying to point to. And the problem of the atheist is they take the fundamentalist at their word, and sometimes the words are just flat out wrong.

Recently there was a literal presentation of the Scriptures on the television series called The Bible. In the whole Exodus sequence there was a whole lot of death and destruction everywhere that was clearly orchestrated by God. This is the God who orders His people to destroy all the inhabitants of Canaan to make sure that everyone is dead so there is room for God's people. What do we do with this vengeful, angry, murderous God? Do we take all this literally? If so, I don't think I like this God. Is there another way to interpret all this? Is there a better hermeneutic?

A hermeneutic is a principle of interpretation and Franciscan Father Richard Rohr offers a working hermeneutic for interpreting the Scripture. He says that in regard to any text, "if you see God operating at a lesser level than the best person you know, the text is not authentic revelation" This means that if God is love (1 John 4: 16), then no person can be more loving than God. "God is never less loving than the most loving person you know." That makes good sense to me. My experience of the Abba of Jesus cannot be the God who told the Hebrew people to kill everyone who got in their way. I just can't take that literally.

But the fundamentalist and the atheist do. And that's too bad.

In Jesus, the Son of the Loving God,

Jr. Tony
